Patrick Barrows

3/30/2020

American National Security

Russia and the Stans

As the intelligence officer for Russian and the Stans it is my objective to:

- Provide up to date intelligence information on the actions of the states in my jurisdiction.
- Inform the Eurasian station chief, Travis Thomas, of the security threats and goals of the states in my jurisdiction.
- Make sure that the United States has the information necessary to combat Russian revanginist and subversive tendencies in both Eastern Europe and in the Middle East.
- To provide the information necessary for the United States to provide aid and military assistance to its allies in this region.
- Providing cost estimates for recommended actions in the region.

Issues:

- Russian encroachment into Eastern Europe and the Middle East.
- Hostilities between certain countries in the Middle East such as Afghanistan.
- Russian control of energy supply to Eastern Europe.

It is my duty to ensure that the United States has enough information to ensure its national security agenda when the countries within my jurisdiction are concerned. This includes providing suggestions on future actions in order to see the national security goals of the United States accomplished in a timely and effective manner.