STATE OF ISRAEL
MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Israel was born in antiquity, came into statehood in 1948, and matured into a regional military power in 1967. Ever since, we have navigated decades of conflict and instability to defend our sovereignty, preserve our national identity, and protect our people from threats to our security. Today, we possess some of the region's most advanced military and technological capabilities. We intend to use these strengths to deter aggression, safeguard our borders, protect our national interests, and secure a future in which Israel can prosper.

Iran: Iran's nuclear ambitions, ballistic missile capabilities, and sponsorship of regional militant organizations present significant threats to our national security, which will be addressed with appropriate force. We aim to dismantle Iran's capabilities through maintaining diplomatic and economic pressure while retaining military capability in the case of escalation.

Gaza & Hamas: A complete disarmament of Hamas is imperative to protect our national security. We seek to arrange security measures to ensure that Gaza will not continue to be a launchpad for any future attacks on our nation.

Turkish Expansion: We seek to remain open to diplomatic relations with Turkey; however, its regional ambitions will be carefully monitored. A continued expansion of military capabilities in northern Syria will be regarded as a threat to regional stability and will be responded to accordingly.

Syria/Lebanon: The uncertainty surrounding al-Sharaa's transitional government must not become a sanctuary for Iranian influence and will be closely monitored. In Lebanon, Hezbollah's military capabilities remain a threat to our security. We aim to disarm the organization and deter any possible threats.

Alliances: We seek to preserve our strategic partnership with Washington as we repair our diplomatic relations with European allies. Additionally, a continued expansion of the Abraham Accords to Arab nations will be coordinated to strengthen regional cooperation.