MINISTRY OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS

OF THE RUSSIAN FEDERATION

Moscow, Russian Federation

The Russian Federation, the world's largest country, spans Eastern Europe and northern Asia. With a longstanding record of political, military, and cultural influence, Russia remains a key player in international affairs. As a permanent member of the United Nations Security Council and a major nuclear power, Russia prioritizes global security and regional stability in its foreign policy. The Russian Federation is committed to protecting its sovereignty, strengthening international partnerships, and maintaining its status as a major global power.

Foreign Policy Priorities

- Conflict in Ukraine and Regional Stability: The Russian Federation asserts that resolving the conflict in Ukraine requires addressing its national security concerns and territorial claims. Russia supports diplomatic negotiations that acknowledge its security interests and promote long-term regional stability.
- NATO Expansion and European Security: Russia considers NATO's expansion toward its borders a threat to national security. The Russian Federation calls for diplomatic negotiations and mutual security guarantees to reduce military tensions and respect the security interests of all parties.
- Economic Sanctions and International Trade: The Russian Federation opposes Western economic sanctions, viewing them as obstacles to economic development and international cooperation. Russia will continue to strengthen trade partnerships with China, India, and other nations, and will seek the removal of sanctions through diplomatic efforts.
- Nuclear Security and Arms Control: Russia recognizes the importance of preventing nuclear conflict and maintaining strategic stability. The Russian Federation supports arms control negotiations grounded in mutual security interests while upholding its national defense capabilities.

- International Cooperation and a Multipolar World: The Russian Federation supports a multipolar international system in which global influence is shared among major powers rather than dominated by Western nations. Russia will continue to strengthen cooperation through BRICS, the Shanghai Cooperation Organization, and the United Nations to promote balanced international relations.
